

So, Your Demands For Equality Backfire!

By Count Marco

Far too many of you American women make a ridiculous fuss about the inhuman beast who rides the crowded bus or street-car all the way home while poor put-upon you stands.

One irate woman said she always feels the urge to start swinging her handbag and denounce in a loud voice those males who remain sitting while she stands.

Really, now, just what motivates such silly thinking? You've gone around screaming to high heaven that you want equality. It's your fault you're stuck with it. So by what right dare you presume otherwise?

You have the right to vote, you drive cars, you are up in arms if you don't get equal pay for doing a man's job, you fight for more of your share or more than you deserve when you manage a divorce, and then you have the nerve to come whining to me that poor little defenseless you has to stand all the way home. My heart bleeds for you.

In the good old days, because a woman demanded only to be treated as a woman, a man did just that. Every man adores a real woman.

No matter how uncouth you may think he is, a man automatically draws from some hidden well of respect a reflex to stand immediately when a woman steps into a room or into a public conveyance.

He never has to be told. It's only when some unreasonable facsimile of a female walks into the room with a chip on her shoulder and dares and expects him to stand that he remains seated.

The next time you ride a public vehicle, note that some men do indeed stand when certain women enter. Instead of being infuriated because you were out-classed, study them.

You'll discover they didn't elbow their way through, didn't stand there and glower. They merely walked on like women because they felt like women, politely looked the man directly in the eye and nodded acceptance even before he knew he was going to give in.

What can any helpless male do when confronted with that type of femininity? He leaps to his feet. No man ever sits in the presence of a lady.

So consequently, if he's sitting, while you stand, take your medicine like the man you're competing with.
